to process raw food materials into finished products. You must be comfortable working on a fast-paced production line, which may involve repetitive tasks, and sometimes working in cool room conditions (protective gear is provided). The most important part of this job is a strong commitment to cleanliness and food safety standards.

This role is not simply about physical labour; it requires an attentive mind to ensure the quality of every product. You will constantly check that the ingredients and products meet the company's strict quality standards. Workers will be trained on the correct procedures for mixing, cooking, cooling, and handling various food items. You must be prepared to maintain and sterilise machinery according to a strict schedule to prevent contamination, as safety is our top priority.

We are looking for candidates who can demonstrate reliability and an excellent work ethic. Shift work, including night shifts or early mornings, is common in food manufacturing and often attracts higher hourly rates. This job is most needed in areas like Melbourne and its industrial suburbs in Victoria, where major food processing facilities are located. The competitive salary reflects the urgent need for skilled and dependable workers in this sector.
